Intro:

I've been building things online now for the past four years at the time of this writing in August, 2026.

Through building a digital marketing service, crafting my personal brand, and creating a coaching program for entrepreneurs, I wrote this book over this four year time frame.

I've held a keen interest in the metaphysical for the past decade and I wanted to compile a set of directions, a metaphysical guide for navigation.

The intention is that this book lands in the hands of the entrepreneurial type of person, the reality creator.

Whether you are young, middle-aged, or old, it does not matter. I am confident you will take something useful from this book and be able to apply the ideas to your own situation, but only if you, the reader, pay close attention.

This set of ideas is what I see as the most impactful and useful from diving deeper into meditation and the metaphysical.

Each metaphor was pulled from my personal experiences and observations of how things work.

Enjoy!

Like A Dog Chasing Its Tail

Dear 2022 Carter

An Outer Place

You aim to pull away from average
But there is a collective keeping you in its field
It's unsettling, the initial strength realized to snap out of its orbit
Upon first attempt, we experience the force keeping us in proximity
That's gravity

When your pull to the extraordinary outweighs the ordinary
That's where your cosmic jolt into a different realm is inevitable
Increase your mass, your personal gravity
Pull away from the nucleus, it's stronger towards the center
You see, when you venture out further, the gravity exponentially lessens

To leave and go see, commitment is required, a certain speed
And understand that to see means you can't unsee
The pull to extraordinary is to break free
As without gravity, as without security, as with vulnerability
But if you're called to leave, so be

Reside up and away into an outer space
Your own cosmic rules on a planet called home
A standard extraterrestrial, a new universal law or lack thereof
Imagine an outer place where five senses dissipate
And a sixth emerges to assure you it's all okay

Escape Velocity

When a rocket shoots off from planet earth...
It needs to reach a certain speed in order to leave.

To jolt out of earth's atmosphere...
The rocket needs to reach "escape velocity".
This is the speed required to counteract gravity and shoot out into space.
If this speed isn't reached...
The rocket will simply be pulled back by earth's gravitational pull and remain in its orbit.
Like a rubber band extending outward.... Resistance, more resistance...
Such crushing pressure... and then finally...
Snap!

No resistance at all.

Not a push, not a pull...
Only a perpetual free fall.
The rocket is shot out into no man's land.
In between earth and the next landing spot, there is a time out in space...
The rocket and crew remain floating... seemingly vulnerable and lost.
Even the feeling of feet on the ground becomes foreign.

Only until the new planet is found.
Then the gravitational pull into orbit will be effortless.
Instead of a repelling escape, it will be a drawing capture.
To leave the old requires a push.
To enter the new requires a pull.
Escape the atmosphere of the old and enter into the new.

Reverb

In music...

There's this effect which sounds like an echo...

It's called reverb.

You have most definitely heard this effect in action...

Imagine it as the short or long echo of a singer's voice.

It creates that smooth, emotional, longing type feel.

Or think of yourself in a large bathroom and your voice bounces nicely off of the walls...

It makes you want to sing when you hear it.

That's reverb.

The interesting thing is...

Reverb is created by the sound waves bouncing off of the walls at a rapid speed.

When you shout in the large bathroom...

You hear the smooth fade or reverb that follows your voice shortly after.

Those sound waves that you created bounce off the walls.

They boomerang around the bathroom and the sound fades...

Like a short, subtle and comforting echo.

Reverb can also be pictured with water.

Imagine yourself standing in a pond...

The water is waist high.

When you go to move position in the pond...

You create ripples or little waves.

The waves ripple outwards when you move...

They hit the outer limit or edge of the pond and bounce back to you.

Physically...

You feel the waves reverberating back to you, tapping you at the waist.

When it comes to reality creation...

The reason why anyone quits on their goal is this reverb.

But the pond that we stand in is energetic.

What does this mean?

When you go to chase a new identity...

When you go to become the person you've always wanted to be...

When you go to MOVE...

You create reverberations.

The only thing is...

This reverb doesn't come in the form of little ripples hitting your waist in a pond of water...

Nor does it echo off of the bathroom walls.

This type of reverb is different...

It's energetic.

It comes in the form of FEELING.

Feeling confused.

Feeling off balance.

Feeling fear.

Feeling flux.

When you move to pursue that big goal of yours, you also move in mind.

This results in you creating ripples in the pond of consciousness.

This is the only reason why anyone quits...

Because the reverb is too painful, off the rocker, and confusing.

The unfamiliar waves shoot a message of survival to the human animal...

So understandingly so, most will resort back to safety, to something familiar and predictable.

To move position in the pond of consciousness means creating ripples.

Those ripples will eventually bounce back and hit you...

But they are just ripples.

It's just the result of moving position.

The reverb is normal.

Become aware of the waves you create when you move.

The more you can understand the reverberations...

The more you can detach and enjoy the swim.

Behind Enemy Lines

When the mission gets assigned to you...
Then it's done
There's the intel you need to end the war...
And it sits in a bunker, at the heart of the enemy position

The commander in chief chose you
Your mind starts racing and quietly crumbling...
You start sweating and thinking, thinking, thinking
"Me?", you say to yourself...
You are the one for the job, the army trusts you to end the war

Underneath all the thinking and mind games, you want it over and done with too
After all...
"Every man needs to venture behind enemy lines at some point", this is what your mind whispers

As you gear up to go and face the enemy...
Your heart is pounding and the thought of this one man mission seems like nonsense
But it makes sense...
Equally, nonsensical and sensical, so it goes

You see how the chess pieces need to fall, the enemy won't expect it, not like this
Never would the enemy expect such a bold, courageous, and downright stupid idea
To send a single man into the heart of the enemy position?!
One soldier to gather what's needed and to put this war, this tension to rest...
They would never expect it

You begin to ponder...that the real war will be won in the confinement of your own mind
To be successful...
Both the rage of a warrior and the calmness of a monk are needed

To get what you want...
To face the enemy, unwavering...
This is what it comes down to...
The weight of the war hinging on a single mind of a soldier
"Interesting...", you whisper to yourself
All geared up...
Your boots have never felt this uncomfortable, yet so fitting

.FM

There are radio stations playing all around us right now...

But we can't hear any of them.

Why is this?

We're not equipped to perceive them.

Radio waves operate in a way that is imperceptible to the human ear.

But of course, if we take our handy dandy radio...

We can convert these radio waves into something we can hear.

In an instant, we can tap into the booming morning voices of sports talk radio.

Already... this simple explanation reveals our backwards way of thinking about the world.

We think a radio station only exists when we can hear it, when in reality it's been present this whole time.

If something isn't perceptible to our 5 basic senses, we discredit the validity quickly...

And this makes complete sense.

The human animal has never been concerned with anything beyond what is necessary to survive...

So we naturally cast the information aside.

What physics has packaged up nicely for us is this reality beyond our 5 senses, that things are much stranger than they appear.

Just like these radio stations...

Think of each of your desires as existing on a frequency.

Our survival paradigm would suggest that it's "somewhere out there" in the future...

But it exists right now.

It's time for you to leave the nest and evolve past just surviving.

It's time for you to think differently about your situation.

Your mind and emotions will reveal how you arrived to where you are now...

And they will also be the dial to tune you into the reality you desire.

Just like these radio stations...

Use your mind and emotions to turn the dial.

Each passing moment...

Each passing day...

Each passing month...

You get to choose on which frequency, on which story line you reside.

As you think of yourself as present in that new reality...

As you feel yourself as present in that new reality...

As you imagine yourself to be on the storyline of that new reality...

As you remove mental and emotional separation...

The world will reflect back to you the material reality of your immaterial reality.

Subterranean

Walk out your door to see how “manifestation” works.
Nature shows us the exact growth process that needs to take place.
This growth process is seemingly everywhere...
But for some reason we think about ourselves as different, as separate.
Oh... how interesting.

Here’s an unpopular thing to say:
You don't need to listen to these people trying to sell you on a shortcut.

Maybe it’s better to just observe nature.

Take this example below:
When you plant a tree in the ground as a little seedling and start nurturing it...
Right away you don't say, "Oh well it's not a tree yet, so it's not real."

No, you would never say that.
We understand that growth process clearly... I feel kind of stupid even writing this.
It’s common sense that that's how things work, but not for us, right?

If you observe your own mind and start planting different ideas in there, you would come across something interesting.
Your odd discovery would align with the ancient message written across history: “As within, so without”
In fact... have you ever seen the “mirror” effect from the tree and its root system?
“As above, so below”

We think about ourselves as disconnected from nature.

There's a seed that needs to be planted in the subconscious mind.
There's a root system that needs to disperse in your mind and body.
And there will be a season of harvest because of it.

Before you see anything sprout up into tangible being, your ideal will exist underneath the surface.
Only until the proper root system forms is when you see something rip through the ground and in the flesh.

So, in relation to manifestation, what is this exact growth process?

1. Plant the seed in the subconscious mind.

Plant the idea of your ideal by thinking about yourself as already on that growth arc... there's always a growth process.

2. Nurturing.

This is the easy part... If it's something that you really want, then you'll be thinking about it all day long regardless.

3. The root system.

Before anything sprouts up from the terrain, there needs to be a proper root system.

Once you start filling your consciousness with new ideas, your mind and body will be renewed. The once grandiose and pedestalized idea will feel more natural and inevitable for you.

4. The harvest.

Finally something sprouts out of the ground and into your reality, into your conscious experience.

In the way that it feels obvious to see your tree begin to rip through the ground in maturity, your desired reality will feel the same.

Exponential

1 hour of work = $20
2 hours of work = $40
3 hours of work = $60

Linear.

From little kiddos, this is the way we are conditioned to think...
This linear way of thinking blankets our modern world.

“Quick returns”
“Predictable”
“Orderly”

An incredible framework for immediate returns and survival.
Now, is this good or bad?
No, it's not about that, let's erase that good/bad way of thinking for a minute as well.
We're just talking about your goals and desires here...
Because if your goal is to be a wildly successful entrepreneur...
Then this way of thinking is catastrophic.

This way of conditioning will sabotage your results from the inside out.
And why?
Because entrepreneurship is an exponential game...
You can't have a linear mindset while playing an exponential game.
Expecting linear results while playing an exponential game is quietly crushing entrepreneurs everywhere.

We like the linear frame as the returns are more immediate...
But the weird thing is...
While linear growth seems more “predictable” and like a “safer bet”...
Exponential is just as predictable... it's the invisible force of compound interest.

Through my hands-on experience in exponential games...

Through building a digital marketing service online.
Through creating a personal brand.
Through crafting a coaching program for entrepreneurs.

This realization was a f*cking game changer.
This hit me like a freight train.

The lesson here is this:

You're an entrepreneur in many ways and you're building things in business, health, relationships, etc.

If you keep operating from your outdated, linear way of thinking...

Self sabotage will keep rearing its head.

Your linear expectations will not match the game you are playing...

So you will quit because things don't seem to be working.

In reality, compound interest is always working...

The only difference is that you do the inputs now, and see the exponential returns later.

Don't expect linear results in an exponential game.

Like A Dog Chasing Its Tail

Chasing, chasing, chasing...

Looking to arrive at a circumstance where you can finally kick off your shoes, sit back and relax, and say, "Aahhhh.... we're good now."

For eternity, till the end of time, you can finally relax...

It's only a matter of time until you uncover something almost unbelievable about this situation.

What you are seeking is yourself.

What?!

Now how does that work?

What do you mean that chasing things outside of myself, looking to arrive at a blissful circumstance could result in me actually looking for myself?

Here's where it gets interesting...

You're always chasing, right? You're looking to finally arrive and to be done chasing.

But the reality is you've already arrived at many different circumstances that you once said would do it for you.

So if you're not careful you can get caught in just this endless loop...

This big unconscious cycle, where you just keep going, keep going, keep going, and you never take time to step back and look at what you're doing.

Okay, that is understood...

But how does this tie back to you?

How could this illusion of arrival, this loop of chasing result in a seeking of self?

When you meditate... you come across that place of arrival.

When all the identifications slide away, the thoughts, beliefs, stories...

"Blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah" - the mental chatter

When all that finally quiets down, you get to experience what's underneath that.

And that's you. That's the real you.

You might ask right away, "What the hell do you mean? I'm me. I'm sitting here reading this."

And I respond to you with, "What are you? Think about it for a minute..."

"Are you your name?"

"Because you can change your name tomorrow and have a completely new name. Some other people actually have your name as well. So, that doesn't seem like you, right?"

"How about your body?"

"Because you could actually lose part of your body and still be here, right?"

"In fact, there are people who are blind and deaf and have no concept for a physical world..."

"But they are still here."

So when you meditate for long enough, you discover that you are this essence of sorts.

When all of the chatter and identifications slide away... you discover that you are this spiritual kind of substance.

You are this place of silence, of peace, and of arrival.

So you come across that the thing that you were looking for, the thing that you were seeking outside of you, was actually yourself... your real self.

When you meditate, you come across that deep place of silence, that place of arrival, where you can finally kick your feet back and be like, "Aahhhh... we're good now."

This discovery will be one of your lifetime achievements.

So you see that you were like a dog chasing its tail...

Chasing, chasing, chasing, and finally the dog actually catches the tail in his mouth.

He gets it clenched between his teeth with pride and realizes, "Oh wow, I was looking for me this whole time."

Dear 2022 Carter

Dear 2022 Carter,

There is music playing all around me as I type this...
But I can't hear any of it.
Now, if I had a radio and turned it on...
I could turn the dial to a certain frequency where I could hear the music.
In the same way... (this is where it gets fun)
Your desired reality is on a certain frequency that you can tune in to right now.
It's all here right now.

Through writing out the vision and creating the picture in your mind.
You can tune in to that frequency at any time.
The important part is, you need to create the feeling of that desired reality.
Simply writing out empty words will not suffice, work to embody the feeling and live in the end result.
Ask yourself: What would it feel like to be that person now?

Once you've defined the vision through writing, etc...
Be that person now. F*ck everyone and everything that tries to tell you that you are not.
It will not be a direct process.
You will not feel confident about it in the beginning...
In fact, it will feel like a fragile little seedling that you have to nurture and care for...
And nobody else will know that you planted it.

Live it inside your own skin until it runs over and floods your outer world.
Make it a non physical fact, a non physical reality...
And don't force the growth process, let it run over effortlessly.
Ignore reality and disregard the appearances of your current situation, you will come to see it's only the old leaves withering away.

Remind yourself of this:
How does the foundational teaching go?
It goes "As within, so without"... not the opposite way around.
In other words, be careful about giving your mind and emotions to the outside world.
You will come to see your physical reality as the effect, and the non physical as the cause.
The new is coming into being and being nurtured through your mind and emotions.

It's not about "being delusional" and "lying to yourself"... it's about following the universal process of growth that you can observe everywhere in nature.
You must live it now to plant the seed...
From there, a full on root system will disperse within you and entangle itself with every f*cking cell in your body.

Only then can something pop up from the soil and appear in the flesh...
Only when the proper root system is formed.

Isn't it interesting how we see this everywhere in nature, but not in ourselves?

We see ourselves as separate.

Remove separation.

Hold that feeling, hold that frequency.

Build your environment little by little to align with that vibration... and to nurture that growth process.

The overflow of outer results will be exponential not linear.

Start with the thoughts in your mind.

And end with the feeling in your body.

By embodying that desired reality mentally and emotionally, you live on the frequency and the natural growth process can then unfold because of it.

I already know your next question, so here is the answer...

To give you an exact time frame, of course I'd be lying.

It all depends on your ability to let go and your openness to receive... we all have our own baggage that slows the process down.

Here's my recommendation: Throw out the time frame and just observe nature.

Plant the seed, let the root system form in your brain and body, then watch something sprout because of it.

Seemingly all of the work will be done inside of you until it uncontrollably rips from the non physical and into tangible being.

Love,

2026 Carter
